PET PARADE

Not every home has one cat. Our colleague has three and each one arrived with a fully formed personality, a distinct set of demands, and no intention of changing. Mufasa, the eldest, came from a pet shop at around 18 months old, carrying a guarded temperament that expresses itself through scratches and stubbornness. He is fiercely independent until hunger intervenes, at which point he becomes the most affectionate cat imaginable. He loves the outdoors but expects to be carried through it, and he surveys the street from the doorway like a landlord checking on his property.

Sisters Venly and Choki arrived together born at home to parents Arya and Pluto, with their owner present from their very first moments. Venly inherited her father's looks and his appetite, but her defining quality is her emotional attunement; she senses when the mood in the room has shifted and quietly moves closer, offering comfort without being asked.

Choki, the smallest of the three, looks just like her mother and has never quite lost the kitten-like appearance she had at birth. She has little interest in food or strangers, but is fiercely devoted to the one person she chose following room to room, waiting at the door after every absence, and monitoring, with barely disguised disapproval, whenever too much attention goes Mufasa's way. Three very different cats, one very full home.

Not every home has one cat. Our colleague has three and each one arrived with a fully formed personality, a distinct set of demands, and no intention of changing. Mufasa, the eldest, came from a pet shop at around 18 months old, carrying a guarded temperament that expresses itself through scratches and stubbornness. He is fiercely independent until hunger intervenes, at which point he becomes the most affectionate cat imaginable. He loves the outdoors but expects to be carried through it, and he surveys the street from the doorway like a landlord checking on his property.

Sisters Venly and Choki arrived together born at home to parents Arya and Pluto, with their owner present from their very first moments. Venly inherited her father's looks and his appetite, but her defining quality is her emotional attunement; she senses when the mood in the room has shifted and quietly moves closer, offering comfort without being asked.

Choki, the smallest of the three, looks just like her mother and has never quite lost the kitten-like appearance she had at birth. She has little interest in food or strangers, but is fiercely devoted to the one person she chose following room to room, waiting at the door after every absence, and monitoring, with barely disguised disapproval, whenever too much attention goes Mufasa's way. Three very different cats, one very full home.
